Al Jarboe is dancing again

Al Jarboe had used a Nolan Penguin to get off his bed, and he had used his hoyerlift with two children in the past few days.

His sister, Lee, When her husband died, she had to lie down on the floor.

That is, 90 C. I was the same way. I have to get you [illegible] carrying an ailing lady, talking to myself, and just

Al Jarboe at 85, in some ways, is the same as he was in his twenties. He is still a dancer, but he loves it now. It is a lovely to be here.

"I'm not dancing anymore," he said. "Dancing is the trouble. "But I go to [illegible] and [illegible] dancing."

When his father ran off with another woman, Al had to help his mother. "I was the oldest child and I had to help my mother. I have two [illegible] sisters. I'm responsible."

Al's story

So he'd carry on his father's 19th Street camp until 1968, when he was 27. "I'm the only one left," he said. "I'm the only one who knows how to run it, how much they make then it goes for a $1 worth of stuff." Plus, his wife, Mary, was pregnant with their first child.

Al's mother, who died in 2003, lived in a duplex on Cedar Street, and Al would go back and forth between it and the camp, occasionally taking a job closer to his mother's home. He worked at Ford for 30 years.

Perhaps one of the most surprising things about Al, he always had a car, he tried to discover all over the country. He had a 1957 Chevy convertible, a 1965 Ford Mustang, and a 1969 Camaro. He went to Las Vegas five times, Colorado, a dozen times, and Chicago more times than he can remember. He's been to all of the American Printing House. Dramatics, the camp he went to as a child, has been a big part of his life. He's been a counselor, a director, and a board member. He's been a camper, too, sent-out cards to Al Cheeks, his friend who was running the world's largest [illegible] camp.

Turns out, Al has an incredible soul-tie to his two sisters. Lee, who is 10 years his senior, and Mary, who is 10 years his junior. Lee was a mother to him, and Mary was a mother to her own children. Mary's daughter, Christy Gaither, Al's niece, is a [illegible] Christy Gaither. He moved in when Dementia, now Alzheimer's, started to take hold of Mary's mind. He would help with her meals. He would help her bathe. He would help with those the couch. It was a lot, but it was a labor of love. And he was taught that love is the most holy form of love. Christian Science. It has since been [illegible] by the Church of Christ.

Al's sister, Lee, died in 2024. Mary died in 2025.

Dementia never dwarfs or ends, and there's been a tremendous toll on Al. He's been in and out of hospitals and rehabilitation centers for the past year. Every time, Al's sisters always were with him.

Now, Al's sisters are gone, and Al is alone. He's been in a rehabilitation center for the past month, and he's ready to go home. He's ready to be with his memories.

"I'm ready for something every day," Al said. "One, I'm ready to be home. Two, I'm ready to be with God. As in the writing, and you have it up to me as well, but I'm ready to be with God. I'm ready to be with my sisters."

Al's sisters are gone. They are not [illegible] anymore, but they are not [illegible] anymore. They're [illegible] in Al's heart. They're [illegible] in Al's memories. They're [illegible] in Al's soul.

They're [illegible] in Al's [illegible] because they're [illegible] in Al's [illegible].
